South-Carolina GAZETTE.

From THURSDAY July 3d, to THURSDAY July 10th, 1755.

LONDON, April 15.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman at the Hague, to a merchant in London.

"THE news you send me is very interesting, and very agreeable. As I am an Englishman, it is with pleasure I hear, that the British lion is at last roused out of his lethargic slumbers, that he shakes his mane, and that his eyes threaten vengance on those who have disturbed his repose; and as he seems to have recovered his spirit, free him from his den, where he has been too long cooped up, and let him range at large, and you will soon see his enemies, who took advantage of his patience or indolence, to insult him, fly before him, or hiding themselves from his fury.

But metaphor apart; you tell me of the vast preparations the government is making for a war with France; with what alacrity and expedition they have been forwarded; the chearfulness and readiness with which your sailors enter the service upon the encouragement that is given them, whereby a noble fleet is mann'd, and ready for sailing orders. But this is not all; you add, that the king is determined not to loose an inch of ground in his American territories, that the parliament have the same sentiments, and resolve to support his majesty in so righteous a cause.

Moreover you assure me, that the nation in general concur with the king and his ministry, that nothing but a war can bring the French to reason. But what you add farther, seems almost incredible, namely, that faction is struck dumb, and that the parties usually denominated high and low, whig and tory, court and country, which on all popular occasions acted with the utmost virulence and animosity against each other, are now united as one man, are all animated with the same spirit, which [illegible] that is, which of the two nations, in my opinion, will strike the first blow? or, in other words, which of the two will first proclaim war? To answer this question at large, would exceed the bounds of a letter; and therefore I shall comprise what I have to say upon it in a few words. It is my opinion, that Great-Britain will not be the aggressor in this case; because, in so doing, she will deprive herself of all her allies, who, I think, are not obliged to lend her any aid, but in case of her being first attacked. Who those allies are that can afford her any assistance in a marine war, I shall take another opportunity to explain.

On the other hand, that the French will not be the first to declare war, seems pretty plain: for so long as they can keep a negociation on foot, which assure yourself they will try all their arts to prolong, and under that cloak be continually sending succours to and strengthening their forces in America, they will think it unnecessary to declare war, as they believe they shall gain their point by a much easier and a less hazardous method.

How the British ministry will conduct themselves on this critical occasion, I shall not presume to give my opinion, though I have not the least doubt, but their resolution will be directed by the utmost prudence and caution. However, in my next, I will venture to give you the sentiments of the people on this side of the water, which I imagine will be as satisfactory, as if I had given you my own."

Petersburgh, April 8. Orders have been issued for making a strict inquisition into the numbers of domestics kept by the prelates and rich ecclesiastics of this empire, beyond the establishment allowed in the time of Peter the great, and out of these are to be taken a certain number of recruits, general Peter Schuwalow will set out in the month of August to make a three years tour through Europe.

Vienna, April 16. It is said a body of Hessian troops will be taken into the pay of a German court, 'till the public tranquility of Europe is thoroughly established.

Madrid, April 8. The last letters from our minister at London, has relieved the administrations from any apprehensions of an open rupture between the crowns of France and Great-Britain, a resolution it is said, having been taken, that both powers should prosecute their just rights in the manner which appears to them most expedient.

Paris, April 26. Two advice frigates were sent in the beginning of this month to Canada, with instructions to the governors, and the rest of the king's officers there; since that a numerous squadron has sailed, with four thousand land forces on board.

London, May 3. Orders are speedily expected to put into commission his majesty's ships Woolwich, Portland and Colchester, at Portsmouth.

It is said, the most rev. the primate of all Ireland will be translated to the first considerable English bishoprick that becomes vacant.

Prague, April 19. A great number of carpenters, masons, and Pioneers, are gone from this country to be employed on the fortifications in Hungary. It is said there will be a camp this summer near Kolin.

Leghorn, April 18. For these several days past, one ship of 50 guns, one zebeck of 16, and one of 10, with Algerine colours, have been cruising in sight of this place, where they have already taken three Neapolitan vessels, one Genoese, and one Feucca belonging to Corsica, so that neither the Tuscan or Dutch ships dare put to sea. Every thing seems to be quiet in Corsica.

Brussels, April 28. Lord Holderness is expected here in his way to Hanover, to confer with prince Charles, whose journey to Vienna is postponed for a month.

Newcastle, May 3. This week an ox was killed at Sunderland, which weighed as follows, viz. The four quarters, 120 stone, 10 pounds; tallow, 21 stone 7 pounds; Hide, 9 stone 1 pound; head and feet, 7 stone 5 pounds; in all 158 stone 9 pound, which reduced to London [illegible] reported that part of the troops were to form a camp on the frontiers of Livonia.

According to the accounts by the last letters from the East Indies of what had passed in the Mogul's empire, since the revolution that gave a new master to Indostan, "The new emperor, as soon as he was seated on the throne, turned out his predecessor's ministers, and appointed Cazendi Kan to be his grand vizir; who, being invested with the first dignity in the empire, flattered himself that he should rule with the despotism of a minister to whom the sovereign owes his crown; But the new emperor did not long suffer him to abuse his power. Notwithstanding the Vizir's representations, and the custom immemorial, which passes for a law in the empire, he set at liberty several princes of the blood who had been confined from their infancy, ordered arms to be given them, and that they should appear at court; which had never been seen since the foundation of the empire by Tamerlane. He afterwards assembled all the grandees of the empire, and intimated to them his orders concerning those princes: Adding, that for the future they should have provision made for them suitable to their rank and birth; and that they should fill the high offices of state, and the posts of governors of the most considerable provinces.

Some time after the grand vizir demanded that the dethroned emperor should lose his head, as a just punishment of his violence and injustice. Whereupon the mogul was obliged to make that unfortunate prince appear before the council: But instead of sacrificing him to the hatred of his minister, he asked what was his crime. The grand vizir replied, that he had not placed justice on the throne with him, as became a sovereign; and that his blood ought to be shed to appease the clamours of his subjects. The emperor replied, 'His subjects were traitors, who forsook 'him, and his crime was, that he was too weak, he 'is sufficiently punished by his misfortune. But since 'his blood must be shed, it shall be so.' He then ordered a surgeon to be called, and made him take a porringer of blood from him in the presence of the council. That done, the old emperor was conducted to the palace, where a handsome apartment is assigned him, and he is served with all the honours that decency requires a sovereign who respects himself in his enemies.

It is whispered that a match is on the tapis between his royal highness the prince of Wales and a daughter of Prussia; and some will have it, that his majesty's going abroad has respect to this match, among other weighty and important subjects.

Notwithstaning the strong squadron sent out under the admirals Boscawen and Mostyn, the fleet remaining at home under the brave Hawke, is abundantly sufficient to chastise any power our enemies can send to sea.—This speedy armament shews, in the strongest light, how justly dreadful to our enemies is the naval power of Great Britain, directed by a person every way equal to so important a trust.

On sunday the duke of Newcastle gave a grand entertainment at Clermont, at which were present, many of the chief nobility, and the French ambassador.

The French ministry have sent over to the English ministry, a tract published in two volumes quarto, to shew their rights to the contested parts of America, wherein they appeal to all Europe, that they are in a just cause, and if any bad consequence proceeds, it is not their fault.—Surely they have never seen the conduct of the French with regard to Nova Scotia, published this winter, or else they would have answered it before they had offered to abuse the public by this new piece of chicanery.

A most worthy gentleman of the middle temple, very eminent as a counsellor in the court of chancery, both for his abilities and glorious distinction of the almighty's advocate, and the poor's attorney-general, had a legacy of 30 000 l. last week left him by a client for being not only an honest man, but an honest lawyer.

London, May 8. On the 16th ult. on the coast of Alicant, four Spanish zebecks and a small vessel fell in with three large Algerines, and after fourteen engagement the Spaniards took the Algerines, and [illegible] Pollot arrived at Limerick, to inspect the condition of that garison.

London, May 10. The lords justices of Ireland, having reason to apprehend that (notwithstanding it is made felony without benefit of clergy, by an act of the 11th of his present majesty, for any subject of his majesty to inlist, or go beyond sea to be inlisted, to serve as a non commissioned officer or soldier in foreign service, without his majesty's licence, or to persuade or compel others to inlist, or to conceal such offenders) there are at this time several persons, who make it their business, in different parts of Ireland, to persuade and entice his majesty's subjects to inlist for foreign service; which, if not immediately prevented may prove of dangerous consequence to the peace of his majesty's government, their excellencies have published a proclamation offering a reward of 400 l. to the first who discovers any offender as aforesaid, within six months from the 29th of April; 100 l. for a discovery of each of the next six offenders; and 50 l. besides a pardon, if an accomplice, for every other offender since the first of January, or within the six months before-mentioned.

LONDON, March 8.

LETTERS from Embden, dated Feb. 16th, acquaint us, that some considerable merchants of that port have enter'd into a project to erect 1 or more forts on the gold coast of Africa, in order to carry on the slave trade to the Neutral islands of St. Thomas and St. Eustatia in the West Indies. This project, it is said, is concerted by some English traders in those parts.

March 11. We hear that at a common-hall yesterday se'nnight at King's Lynn in Norfolk, the corporation added 20 s. to his majesty's bounty of 3 l. as an encouragement to able-bodied men to enter into the sea service.

March 18. The additional bounty of 20 s. per man given by the mayor and corporation of Lynn in Norfolk, over and above his majesty's royal bounty, has induced a great many able sailors to enter, and they continue still daily entering; so that, 'tis thought, there will be no occasion for pressing, which the mayor and corporation are greatly averse to.

The magistrates of Glasgow have offered an additional bounty of 30 s. over and above his majesty's bounty, bounty, to every able-bodied ſeaman who ſhall voluntarily enter himſelf to ſerve his majeſty's fleet, in the river or frith of Clyde, within the time mentioned in his majeſty's proclamation.

April 3. The annual committee of the royal burroughs of Scotland, have directed their preſident to write to the magiſtrates of the ſeveral burroughs which are ſea port towns, warmly recommending to them to contribute their utmoſt endeavours, and give their aſſiſtance to the officers employed by his majeſty, in procuring a ſpeedy ſupply of ſailors and ſeafaring men to man his majeſty's fleet, for protecting the nation in its juſt rights and privileges, and for maintaining and promoting its trade.

A bounty of two guineas is given by the corporation of Liverpool to every able ſeaman of twenty, and not above fifty years old, that enters into his majeſty's navy on or before the 20th day of April next, before a committee appointed for that purpoſe.
